Hackett at Little Theatre. With the final performance to-night, closes what is really an engagement extraordinary at the Little Theatre-James K. Hackett, in "The Prisoner of Zenda."

This famous story and equally famous play is wonderfully well pantomimed in four elaborate reels presented by the Famous Players' Film Company, of which, it is said, Daniel Frohman is managing director. Besides James K. Hackett, who, a few years ago, was immensely successful in the rele of Rudolf Rassendyll, the presenting company is composed of excellent actors. Walter Hale, for instance, is the Rupert of Hentzau, and Beatrice Beckley, the Flavia, while David Torrence is as sinister a Black Michael as the heart of Anthony Hope could desire. The out of doors settings possible to motion picture plays permit of a scenic environment with which no stage performance can ever cope.

Altogether, this condensation of "The Prisoner of Zenda" into a picture play lasting less than an hour and a half is very well worth seeing. W. D. G.
